Featured Book: The Heavens by Sandra Newman

Sandra Newman's intoxicating fourth novel, "The Heavens." Is an unconventional tale of love versus madness, fate and time travel, and the creation of an alternate universe.... all through the power of dreams. While the story begins in a New York in the early 2000's that is slightly like our own, the evershifting sands of Newman's novel keeps the reader as unbalanced as the characters.

It begins as a simple love story...Ben meets Kate at a friend's dinner party and love blooms amongst the dumpling and drinks. Quickly though, things grow complicated as we learn that Kate's reality is very different. She is caught between the present and the dream of a life in Elizabethan England. But are these just dreams, or something more. As the past changes so does Kate and Ben's present. Things are noticeably different, and the little difference builds up. Ben is concerned that the woman he's in love with is losing her mind. As each moment, takes them further from where they began, each of Kate's choices also shifts reality further and further down an alternate path. This fragility of this world becomes more pronounced each time Kate wakes from her life in the past.

The Heavens is a powerful look at the consequences of our actions. Newman has created a thought-provoking novel, weaving many complicated threads into a hard-core exploration of dreams, love and their power to change us. It was named a Best Book of the Year by the New York Times, NPR, Guardian, Literary Hub, Electric Lit, Observer, Kirkus Reviews, Washington Independent Review of Books, and Tor.com.

The Washington Independent Reivew of Books had this to say: "The novel is a fantastic representation of the alternatereality/time-travel genre with reality changing every time Kate returns to the present. While many novels have explored 'The Butterfly Effect, ' the subject is not always handled with such expertise."

Sandra Newman is the author of five other books and is currently working on a memoir. She taught writing and literature at several universities. She has also published nonfiction pieces in numerous journals and newspapers. She has also written The Western Lit Survival Kit and Read This Next. She co-authored the hugely successful How Not to Write a Novel. Sandra Newman currently lives in New York.
